"Were one asked to characterize the life of religion in the broadest and most general terms possible, one might say that it consists of the belief that there is an unseen order, and that our supreme good lies in harmoniously adjusting ourselves thereto."

—William James (1842-1910), The Varieties of Religious Experience (1902)
ceptions about Zen Buddhism.

Throughout the course, participants will read extensive selections from important Buddhist texts. We will also seek to combat Westerners' common misunderstandings about Buddhist traditions. We will analyze, for instance, why Westerners who seek alternatives to their own religions never try to practice such consequential forms of Japanese Buddhism as Pure Land, the dominant tradition of Buddhism among both Japanese and Japanese-Americans. We will also give attention to common Western misconceptions about Zen Buddhism.

This syllabus is simply a general plan for the course. Changes and variations, as announced to the class by the instructor, may be necessary at times. All academic work must meet the standards contained in the document titled A Culture of Honesty. All students are responsible for informing themselves about those standards before performing any academic work. You are also expected to take thorough notes in class. Whenever you miss class, it is your responsibility to check with classmates about what you missed—not to expect the instructor to give you a personal review or to excuse you for not having paid attention to important announcements.

You are welcome to chat with the instructor after class, during office hours, or at other arranged times. The time before class, however, is NOT a good time for any discussion.

The classroom is not a lunchroom: please show respect for others by doing your snacking and enjoyment of beverages before you come to class or after you leave. It is also not a phonebooth, so please make sure that any phones that you bring into the building are turned off. In sum, it is your responsibility to show respect for others by refraining from activity that might distract others or interfere with the learning process. Failure to do so will affect your course grade.

Course Objectives:
1. To illumine the hermeneutic issues involved in understanding religion across cultures. Prof. Mark MacWilliams of St. Lawrence University calls this process “gaining cross-cultural religious literacy.”
2. To introduce the Buddhist traditions of China and Japan, in relation to earlier Indian traditions.
3. To illustrate that religious traditions evolve, and that such evolution can be understood by reference to historical, intellectual, cultural and existential phenomena.
4. To sample the cultural riches of Buddhism by reading important selections from Buddhist texts.
5. To stimulate meaningful comparison, and contrast, of Buddhist traditions with those more familiar to students from their own cultural heritage. As Prof. Mark MacWilliams says, this means: “To learn more about religion and about one’s self. Max Müller, a famous historian of religions, once said, "One who knows one religion knows none." The same can be said about human life. One who knows only one culture or one way of living knows none. To know ourselves—who we are, who we could be—means we must know others. And to know others means we must study that which informs and guides their sense of self, society, and world. To study what people believe is ultimately real, good, beautiful, true, and the way they put this into practice is to study religion.”

TEXTS

1. ✉ Course Reader (Available at Bel-Jean’s Printers, Downtown)
2. Required Textbooks (Available at local bookstores)
   - Robinson and Johnson, Buddhist Religions (5th ed.)
   - Conze, trans., Buddhist Scriptures
   - Dumoulin, Zen Enlightenment: Origins and Meaning
   - Wright, Philosophical Meditations on Zen Buddhism
   - Buswell, The Zen Monastic Experience

Most of the required readings will be found in the Reader and in the required textbooks. In addition, other assigned readings will be made available (1) on reserve, in hard-copy or as “e-texts” (accessible from any computer); (2) on the instructor’s webpage; and/or (3) as handouts.
REQUIREMENTS

- Regular attendance. Frequent absences will lower your grade.
- Timely completion of all required readings.
- Two in-class objective tests  [each 30% of course grade]
- Take-home Final essay exam  [40% of course grade]

Graduate students will write a research paper on an approved topic, in lieu of the final exam.

The midterm withdrawal deadline is Tuesday 4 March. A student who submits assigned work before that date, then later withdraws from the course, will receive a W or WF based on that work. A student who withdraws before submitting assigned work will receive a grade of W.

At the end of the course, borderline grades are usually rounded up. But if a student’s written work seems to indicate that he/she failed to do the assigned readings, or if her/his attendance is irregular, such facts will seriously affect her/his grade on specific assignments, and in the course overall. Class attendance will be recorded, and will be a primary factor in determining the disposition of borderline grades at the end of the course.

NOTE the “Criteria for Evaluation of Papers,” in your course READER. The READER also includes:

- Kirkland, “THE WRITING PROCESS AS PARTNERSHIP”
- Kirkland, “A GUIDE TO WRITING ACADEMIC PAPERS.”

Following the advice provided there will help you write good final exam essays, and good papers, in this and other courses. THE ACADEMIC VALUE OF THE INTERNET

Your instructor’s webpage (HTTP://KIRKLAND.MYWEB.UGA.EDU) includes many pertinent

- STUDY GUIDES
- FULL-TEXT Publications
- LINKS to other GOOD SITES

But, like many other good sites, this one has its limitations: (a) it is now quite outdated; (b) it has never provided all the material that even your instructor would like it to provide; and (c) it was not constructed, in the first instance, to serve as a pedagogical tool. Even such a website tries to fulfill different functions for different people: some are intended as professional connections for other scholars, others are designed to appeal to the general public. The latter may be more colorful or amusing, but are not necessarily more reliable or more informative. Remember to think critically about what you are seeing: many sites have an unexpressed agenda, just like movies and TV shows, and some may be well-intentioned but insubstantial and/or unsound. So beware attempting to use the internet as an educational tool — particularly in regard to non-Western religions — without expert guidance. Remember that all a person has to do to create, for example, a website on Buddhism is to set up the website: he or she does not really have to know much, or anything, about Buddhism! And for psychological and/or economic reasons, some people construct such sites just to get attention, or to get a reputation that they have not bothered to earn through hard work or proven expertise. Newcomers can easily mistake such a site for a reliable resource. See the instructive guide to “Evaluating Websites” from a committee of the American Library Association at http://www2.kenyon.edu/Depts/Religion/Fac/Adler/EvaluatingWebsites1.htm. Your instructor will recommend other websites that may be useful and reliable.

With a very few exceptions, responsible scholars do not put their actual research on the web. Few professors’ webpages, for instance, even provide full bibliographic data telling you what they have published. And only a handful post unpublished research findings, or provide full-text reprints of any of their publications, the way that your instructor and a few others do on their own webpages. So despite the immense amount of stuff that you can find on the internet, it is unreliable as an educational resource. Solid and reliable studies of Buddhism, and other non-Western traditions, generally appear only in your university library, within the pages of scholarly books and journals. Such publications—unlike internet websites—undergo a careful peer-review process, by which today’s knowledgeable authorities confirm the substance and value of good scholarship and screen out shoddy material. So do not attempt to "do research" on the web! Your instructor will recommend particular websites that are useful and dependable. But unless instructed otherwise, you should plan to do all of your research in your university library, informed by your instructor and guided by trained reference librarians.
