Class Materials:
Required Books (available at UNC Student Stores):

The remainder of our required readings and source materials are listed under “Course Documents” and “External Links” on Blackboard. These are of three types: readings from the Web, pdf’s scanned and posted to Blackboard, and Audio-Visual sources from the Web. These will also be listed on the Class Schedule by the day on which they are assigned.

You should read a newspaper with good international reporting or watch/listen to an international news broadcast (e.g. BBC World News, CNN International, Reuters International) every day—it is critical in this course to stay engaged with world news. You should also have access to an atlas and consider purchasing an inexpensive historical atlas like Hammond's Historical Atlas of the World.

Overview:
Just what does “globalization” mean? Whatever its definition, this word permeates our culture. Many bandy the word around to describe an ongoing—but vague—process or set of processes in the world today, but not everyone agrees on its meaning. What does it look like? What are its effects? How did/does it happen?

The purpose of this course is to learn about international historical developments in the post World War II era and investigate the roots of contemporary global political, economic, social, and cultural issues. This class is also a forum for sharpening our skills as thinkers and communicators—both essential attributes for being informed citizens in this complex world.

Some might question whether or not a course on World History is even possible considering the Earth’s vast geographical scope and the diversity of its human cultures. It is a fair question!

The events of the last six decades, however, have fundamentally altered the human condition. Air travel, electronic communications, and consumer trends have led to the development of the first truly global community. In this course, we will have the opportunity to debate the impact of these developments and the extent of this global community, and see what has remained of the “local” or has been lost to international forces. When we are finished with this course, we should all have some sense of what globalization means to us as individuals and its importance for understanding the communities in which we live.
Course Themes:
The scope of our subject obviously prevents us from addressing every country and every event since 1945. To make things more manageable, this course will focus on the interplay of three key themes:

- Political ideologies and the paradoxes of their implementation
- The growth of nation-states, nationalism, supranationalism, and internationalism
- Tensions between individual rights and societal claims

The first theme will guide our investigation of the Cold War and the spread of communism and capitalism throughout the world. We will consider how Cold War ideologies and political practices interacted in a variety of settings from powerful democratic regimes to impoverished societies.

The second theme will inform our study of the evolution of classic European nation-states after World War Two, the creation of new nations following decolonization and the end of the Cold War, and the development of economic and political treaties and organizations that have contributed to greater international stability.

The third theme is perhaps the most important. We will explore the many claims of individuals in an age in which human rights have risen to the top of international political priorities. This theme emerges in discussions of religious identity, women’s rights, environmentalism, ethnic and racial discrimination, and touches on the fundamental quandary of modernity—the limited scope of “universal” virtues and values.

Core Topics:
In addition to our themes, we will focus on the following broad topics while investigating specific case studies.

- The Cold War and its international ramifications
- Decolonization and the trials and triumphs of the developing world
- The development of the global capitalist market
- The effects of consumerism on individuals, cultures, and the environment
- Twentieth-Century conceptions of human rights
- Religious, Cultural, or social resistance to global trends

You should keep our themes and topics in mind when reading all our materials including the textbook. Together they will inform exam essay prompts and our final paper. You will be challenged to combine themes and topics to develop original and critical analyses of our material.

Assignments and Assessments:
This is a reading intensive course. This does not mean that you will have to read more than you would in your average history class, but rather that the readings play a central role in the course lectures, discussions, and assignments. It is strongly suggested that you print out all assigned readings and bring them to class the day for which they are assigned.
You will be assessed on the following assignments:

- Eight quizzes of which six will be averaged together for your final quiz grade.
- A mid-term comprised of term identifications and an essay.
- A 4-5 page semester essay.
- A 2 page film review
- And a final exam comprised of term identifications and two essays.

Attendance will be taken every day and will help determine your participation grade. There will be opportunities to boost this grade through participation in discussion forums.

Exams questions will be drawn from lectures, readings, and other materials reviewed in class.

Communication:

Further details on assignments and requirements will be provided in class and/or through Blackboard. You should contact me if there is any confusion over class requirements, assignments, or assessments. I urge all students to come to me with any other problems, questions, or insights regarding course materials or procedures. I will be available in my office twice a week for consultations and by appointment. I can be reached at my email anytime but I ask for a 24 hour window in which to respond, unless I explicitly make myself available for online consultation ahead of time. In cases of real emergency I can be reached on my home phone (370-9384). Please come see me or send me an email; good communication can overcome all problems.

UNC Honor Code:

This course follows the guidelines set out by the UNC Honor Code, the full text of which (and description of the Honor Court’s procedures) is available online at http://honor.unc.edu. All cases of plagiarism, cheating, unapproved group work, and other violations will be prosecuted. Students must sign all work with a statement that it was completed in accordance with the rules set forth in the Honor Code. The instructor pledges to inform all students of citation guidelines and procedures to follow to avoid accusations of plagiarism.

THE HONOR CODE: It shall be the responsibility of every student at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill to obey and to support the enforcement of the Honor Code, which prohibits lying, cheating, or stealing when these actions involve academic processes or University, student, or academic personnel acting in an official capacity.
